In the Spotlight

Did you know Flagler Beach was incorporated on April 16, 1925, but it dates to 1908? In the early years W. A. Cookman started a settlement, called Sea Beach. Later part of it was called Ocean City Beach but postal authorities said that name was too long. However, rumor has it the name was rejected due to too many communities already named Ocean City Beach. Residents voted in 1923 to call their community Flagler Beach.

One of the early homesteaders of Ocean City was George Moody who moved to the area in 1913. Visit the Museum and learn more about George Moody and our Founding Families, including the Wickline, Mosby, and Fuquay families.

Award-Winning Nature Photographer Visits Flagler Beach Historical Museum

Award-winning wildlife photographer, and contributor to the Flagler Beach Historical Museum's new Turtle Wall, Ursula Dubrick, recently visited the Museum.

"It's just such an honor to have my photography shared in a museum for visitors to enjoy," said Ursula. "Capturing an image of a sea turtle making the arduous journey back to the ocean after spending hours laying her eggs, is something few people see, yet can connect within a photograph," Ursula added. The Turtle Wall includes photos and facts about Leatherback, Loggerhead, and Green Sea Turtles.

Ursula Dubrick's photography has appeared in "National Wildlife", "Florida Wildlife", "Nature Photographer Magazine", "Space Coast Living Magazine", as well as numerous calendars and publications. National Geographic features several of her images in their stock photography collection. Ursula's career has taken her to Africa, India, and Canada. In the United States, she has been to Alaska, Minnesota, Tennessee, Wyoming, and many other states in pursuit of images of the native wildlife there.
